much to the morale of the group. At the last crossing of the Arkansas River the officer commanding gave orders that some of the women and children who had accompanied the troops as far as Santa Fe be detached and sent to winter in Pueblo. It is said that there was much sickness at Fort Pueblo and but for the tender nursing of Sarah and other women of the Battalion many more deaths would have occurred during their forcedstay in this isolated palce situated on the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains. When spring came they journeyed on to the valley. Shortly after their arrival, Capt Higgins, with his family, and fifty other families, was called to settle Sanpete County. The roads were long and rough, the men walking all the way through the canyon clearing boulders from the path of the wagons. They made camp at Manti. Holes were dug in the hillside for shelter. When the men came in from work at night they would have to kill snakes in these dugouts before making up the beds. The first death that ocured here was the little daughter of Nelson and Sarah Higgins. , Source, Our Pioneer Heritage p485, Vol 1
